Will Study Mars.

Boston, July 23.—Percival Lowell, Boston's famous astronomer, who is now on his way to Flagstaff, Arizona, is at the head of the most scientific expedition planned for more than half a century. The object of the expedition is to make observations on Mars, and to procure, if possible, evidence to support the theory held by Mr. Lowell and other astronomers that the "red star of war" is inhabited by human beings.

For several years Mr. Lowell has devoted all his time to the study of the planet Mars. In 1894 he made the most complete map of the planet ever drawn. His statement that the canals of Mars were made by human beings, and are not glacial or surface fissures, created a stir among the astronomers of Europe. Since then his researches have received the greatest consideration from astronomers the world over, and his coming observations under such good circum-stances are awaited with the deepest
